Did you know that there is a maximum of ten words in a Google™ search, or that repeating a word results in different search results? What about the fact that some search types are antisocial, and won't work with other search types? How about the fact that the order of your keywords affects the results that are returned? Neither did I, and I use Google™ nearly every day.

Just for Fun is the story of Linus' life, told with the assistance of a journalist. Rather conveniently, it appears that Linus has had a very easy to read life, although perhaps it is the literary style. The book is interesting, fun, and very easy to read.

The book is filled with many little stories: - drinking fosters at a health farm (why fosters?)
